Not illustrated. 1853 Excerpt: . . . f A dog looking at a book sees the same that a man sees, but he understands not the intellectual meaning intended to be conveyed to the reader by the aid of the symbols. Is, then, the universe an object final or a book f This is the great question of philosophy If we admit it to be a book, as St. Paul does (Rom. i. 20), we thereby admit science to be truly a revelation. --Theory of Hum. Prog. , p. 252. to this law the human mind is designed to present a succession of stages, beginning with the first impulse of the senses, and then rising in the scale of selfconsciousness and intellectual freedom up to the highest reason and the highest will. The nature and varieties of sensation we have already analyzed; md now, having drawn the imaginary line that stparates this from the next intellectual process, we hive to consider, what are the characteristics which, according to our theory on the one hand, and to tht actual facts of the case on the other, most obviously atttch themselves to the intuitive form of the human intelligence. The following observations will comprehend what is most essential to be retained as formag the distinctive features of this particular form of ora mental activity. 1. Intelligence as developed on this stage will not, as is the case in sensation, be a mere response to some physical impression; in other words, it will necessarily involve a...
