When Aunt Nettie said this, she rattled the door-knob, and stooped, and peeped into the keyhole. What do you suppose she saw? Why, nothing but another eye, as saucy as her own, winking at her from the other side of the keyhole. Fe-fi-fo-fum! said Aunt Nettie. I smell evergreen. You are going to have a fair, Christine. L-t me come in and help you. No, thank you, ma am! said Christine, as she opened 116 CHRISTINE S FAIR. the door a very little, and came out after much squeezing. Pay me five cents, and you may come to my fair to-night. Aunt Nettie gave her a bright five-cent piece, and took a little ticket, on which Christine had printed neatly, -- Christine s Fair.
